📍 Los Angeles

After forty years of service as city attorney to multiple southern California cities, Michael has retired from active service as a city attorney and currently provides advice and counsel as special counsel to public agencies throughout the State.

The Los Angeles Daily Journal has named Michael among California's Top 25 Municipal Lawyers, and he was profiled in a special Municipal Law supplement edition of the paper. He has appeared on the Southern California Super Lawyers list every year since 2008.

Michael's commitment to the municipal law field is evidenced by his current role on the California City Management Foundation Board of Trustees and past service as president of the City Attorneys Department of the League of California Cities, his leadership in co-authoring the original version of the League's "Municipal Law Handbook" and as chair of the League's Brown Act Committee, in which capacity he negotiated, on behalf of California cities, major changes to the State's open meeting laws, which took effect in 1994. He has served as editor for "Open & Public V," the League's manual on the Brown Act. Michael also served as president of the City Attorneys Association of Los Angeles County and a member of the Executive Committee of the Public Law Section of the State Bar (and editor of the Section newsletter).

Michael is also a devoted educator in his field. He teaches local government law at the University of Southern California Gould School of Law and is a frequent lecturer on municipal law subjects. He has authored numerous articles and trainings for lawyers in the field. In addition, he advised the California Constitutional Revision Commission on behalf of the League of Cities from 1994-1996 with respect to home rule issues affecting both charter and general law cities.
